Specialty Lab Testing Facilities

As of March 1, 2000, both Pasteurella and E. cuniculi testing (previously done at the University of Missouri Research Animal Diagnostic and Investigative Laboratory [RADIL]) are being performed by:

Sound Diagnostics (Dr. Barbara Deeb)	206-363-0787 (voice)
1222 NE 145th Street	206-383-0948 (fax)
Seattle, WA 98155-7134

Thyroid serum testing for rabbits is done by a central laboratory in British Columbia. The following address is used for submitting samples from the U.S. — have your veterinarian call for details:

C.L.	800-663-1425 (voice)
PMB 80
250 H St.
Blaine, WA 98230

Consulting Veterinarians (Vet-to-Vet Consultations)

If your veterinarian needs to consult on a difficult case, she may have her own network of colleagues to call on. If not — or if her network fails to yield the information she is looking for — the following are some of the experienced rabbit veterinarians who are available for consultations with their colleagues. Keep in mind that whether your veterinarian is looking for someone who has dealt with a rare disorder or is seeking new approaches to a common problem, it may take several calls to locate the information. And while many veterinarians consult with colleagues at no charge, some veterinarians — including some listed here — do charge a consultation fee. In addition to paying any fees charged by the other vet, remember to offer to pay your vet for the time she spends consulting for you as well as any long-distance charges.
